RE: JOINT STATEMENT ON CREATION OF A TORONTO YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Dear Mayor Chow, Minister Parsa and Minister Ien,

We hope this letter finds you well. We are writing to you collectively as a diverse group of community organizations, youth-serving agencies, and educational institutions to express our concerns about the alarming rates of youth unemployment in Toronto and its interconnection with the rising incidents of youth violence.

Over the past year, the Toronto Youth Cabinet has engaged thousands of youth across the City. We have heard firsthand about their desire for meaningful employment that allows them to learn, grow, contribute positively to their communities, and gain the necessary skills to support them on their path toward a future of career success and economic security. However, the urgency of the current situation calls for immediate action.

Toronto is experiencing the highest levels of youth unemployment since 2014, coupled with significant cuts to employment services at all levels of government. Our most vulnerable young people – particularly Black, Indigenous, youth living in priority neighborhoods and Toronto Community Housing – are bearing the brunt of this crisis. The consequences are dire, as evidenced by the staggering 161% increase in youth firearm arrests and the disproportionately high rates of violent carjackings committed by youth over the last two years.

We cannot ignore the direct link between the lack of economic opportunities and an increased risk of youth involvement in serious violence and crime. Unemployment perpetuates poverty and disenfranchisement, impacting not only youth's immediate financial stability but also their long-term prospects and mental well-being.

Research shows investing in Summer Youth Employment Programs (SYEPs) can break this vicious cycle. SYEPs provide proven protective factors, equipping youth with job skills, connecting them to mentors and networks, prioritizing opportunities for equity-deserving youth, and offering critical wraparound support. Cities like Atlanta, Chicago, and New York have experienced significant decreases in violent crime, arrests, and justice system involvement after implementing robust SYEPs.

That is why the Toronto Youth Cabinet, The Neighbourhood Group Community Services and all underlying signatories are collectively calling for the City of Toronto to create a Toronto Youth Employment Program to provide 10,000 additional jobs for youth aged 15-24 by Summer 2026!

This program must be a cross-sectorial initiative ensuring youth have access to employment in the private sector, non-profit sector, and within the City's own divisions, agencies, boards and corporations. This YEP is more than just a job creation effort, it is an upstream investment in Toronto's future. It will bridge the gap between youth and the labour market, offering valuable paid work experience, skills development, mentorship, networking, capacity-building opportunities and a pathway to long-term employment. By providing holistic capacity-building experiences along with meaningful and gainful employment, we can equip youth for economic security and career success while reaping the benefits of engaging them productively.

We recognize the magnitude of this undertaking, but we are confident that through collaborative efforts and a commitment to prioritizing the needs of our youth, we can achieve this ambitious goal. To launch and sustain an initiative of this scale, we urge the City to allocate dedicated funding, while also advocating for investment from the provincial and federal governments. A program providing 10,000 youth employment opportunities in its first year would require an estimated investment of $50 million.

Investing in youth employment is not only a moral imperative but also a sound economic strategy. Research indicates that for every dollar spent on upstream youth crime prevention and employment programs, society can save multiple dollars in downstream costs associated with policing, incarceration, and the lasting impacts of crime on our communities. Our young people are not merely assets; they are the foundation upon which we build a safer and more equitable city for all.

We urge you, Mayor Chow and Members of City Council to seize this opportunity and demonstrate your commitment to Toronto's youth by supporting the creation of a Toronto Youth Employment Program. Together, we can create a brighter future for our youth by investing in their potential and providing them with the opportunities they deserve to thrive while also strengthening our economy, and promoting public safety, Mayor Chow, Minister Parsa and Minister Ien, we thank you for your attention on this matter. We look forward to working collaboratively on this crucial initiative.
